ing refused, a bill was passed, and only wanted the sanction of the Governor to become a law, forbidding them to transact any business at the Custom House. This procedure had naturally produced considerable excitement; but we presume the Peruvian government will not proceed demand.

The United States frigate Potomac, Com. Downes, was at Callao, where she arrived on the Gregory, was at Puns, (Guayaquil,) on the 16th of January, to sail immediately for Valparaisu. The schr. Dolphin, Lieut. Com. Long, sailed from Panama on the 16th February, for Lima

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

We understand that the President of this Company has called upon the Treasurer of Virginia, for an advance on the instalment of $250,-000, authorized by the last Legislature to be contributed on the part of the State. Much the greater part of the appropriation on the part of Maryland to the same company, will be made by the next month. The work is said to be in rapid progress.— More than 4500 hands and 800 horses are employed upon its different branches-and at least 9,000 lbs. of powder a week are consumed in blasting rocks. It is expected that the line from the mouth of the Tiber, up to Harper's Ferry, a distance of 64 miles, will be completed in the month of May-and the whole line, more than 200 miles, within three and a half years short of the time allowed by the charter.

The compromise, proposed by the late Legis. lature of Maryland, between this Company and the Baltimore Rail Road Company, will probably lead to an amicable and complete adjustment of the differences that have prevailed between them-and thus enable both companies to push their works to their ultimate completion.

The Treasurer of the State has advertised for a loan, for the purpose of raising the instalment. It is true, the surplus sum of $50,000 remains in the Treasury; and it was proposed at the close of the last session to make some active investment of it-but on account of some differences of opinion upon the subject, no arrangement was adopted .- Richmond Compiler.

Return Duties .- We understand that the amount of return duties under the 18th section of the tariff act of 1832 at this port, is estimated at about $1,200,000; that the amount of money already paid out is $120,000, and the amount of duties that has accrued during the month of march, under the new rates of reduced duty, is $340, 000 -Boston Pat.

It has at last been decided, that Joseph Pease, the Quaker, who it was feared would lose his seat in the Imperial Parliament, on account of belong. ing to a society which sanctions affirmation instead of swearing, -- shall retain his membership. The subject was brung t before the House of Commons, and after some explanatory remarks from the Hon. Mr. Wyon, and the Solicitor Gen-

" The Speaker then put the question." That Joseph Pease, Esq. be allowed to make his solemn affirmation at the table instead of his oath."

The Aves seemed almost universal, and not one No was heard.

The Speaker gave his decision-" I think the Ayes have it,"-amid tremendous cheering." It affords us gratification to record such a vote as this. It is a sign that the doctrines of actual right, are finding able and triumphant supporters. It is but the pursuivant of other privileges, that are destined to herald the stately steppings of Freedom through the eastern hemisphere.

MEN IN WASHINGTON. From the Portland Advertiser.

THE VIRGINIA DELEGATION -Mr. Tyler of the Senate, is one of the most agreeable of men. His heart is alive to every generous feeling, and though you may differ from him on every possible point, yet you cannot but respect him and his motives. No Senator is more popular. No one has more personal friends actiong his adversaries -Mr. Tyler is about six feet in height-not over large in his person-with a very prominent nose. and a good eye, but not over-remarkable in its indications. His declamation is at times very beautiful. He speaks with great fervor and enthusiam, like most of the orators of the Virginia school, and is much more fond of the sentences and fine words, than of fine arguments. Hrs arguments never amount to much. His positions are often absurd, and the manner in which he sustains them, yet more absurd than the argu ments themseives. Mr. Tyler is a nullifier and seceder, but more of a seceder than a nullifler. He believes that there is no such a thing or being as a citizen of the United States, unless he becomes such by being first the citizen of a sovereign State. He believes that a State in her sovereign capacity can do no wrong, and that, therefore, the United States cannot repress nor restrain her, if she in her sovereign capacity, resoives to go out of the Union. He holds to many more such absurdities, and after a speech, advancing them all, has been re-elected by Virginia for a term of six years. When Mr. Tyler had Mr. Tazewell for a colleague, the two Senators made one splendid man; for Tyler could declaim with great force and great effect, and Tazewell could reason on nicer distinctions than any man I ever met with. Tyler is of the Irish school of eloquence, borrows the manner of Grattan and Curran, and Philips, and Tazeweii was a metaphysician, a logician, a hair-splitter-a man who could prove right wrong, and wrong right, and half convince you at times, that three and two

Mr. Rives, the other Virginia Senator, and the successor of Mr Tazewell, is a middle aged man; small in his person; polite, but not polite with ease; well bred, but rather uneasily so; and kind, but with an effort. He is known as a bold opposer of Mr. Adams' administration, and afterwards as Minister Plenipotentiary to France. He has been flattered and caressed by the great men of Virginia, and was taken much notice of by Jefferson, as a young man of promise, as well a loan from the foreign merchants resident at the as by Madison, in whose school of constitutiona loan from the local Lima. This requisition bemuch more rational, and much less absurd than the politicians of Virginia in the mass. He is no nullifier nor seceder. Virginia has hitherto had her eye on him for the highest gift in her bestowal, but whether the ground he has taken of late will injure him in her estimation, remains to be seen.

As a debater, Mr. Rives is ready, with a comsume the Peruvian government and outrageous mand of good language. He is a natural and to extremities in enforcing such an outrageous mand of good language. He has little of the Virginia rant, and much of the northern sobriety. His enunis solemn, correct and impressive. His mode of 15th of December. The Falmouth, Captain addressing the Senate is so like that of earnest conversation that he gains much attention, which manner, by the way. I suspect is the true secret of oratory. Mr. Rives is probably destined to occupy a high station in the government, and a conspicuous place in the eyes of the people, not so much for his talents, for there are men far before him, though he is a first-rate second-rate man, as from his being from Virginia, a State which holds such a spot on the map, that it must have influence more or less, and which at this time is so deficient in talent, in which she has been hitherto so remarkable, that any man of a common strength of intellect must entitle himself to, and obtain her support. Virginia usually puts out her best foot, and sends her best men, and as Mr. Rives is among the first, I should not be surprised, if, in a few years, the Old Dominion should put him forth for the Presidency.

Of the Virginia delegation in the House of Renresentatives, I know but little. Archer, Bouldin, Mercer, Patton, and Stevenson, are the most conspicuous. Archer is chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, which is an important and conspicuous committee, and which course, makes its chairman a conspicuous man Archer has long been in Congress. He is tall and slender in person, a very poor speaker, low in his voice and indistinct, and of course cannot be heard. He is also without vigor or animation. He is credited with talents, but if he were not a lirginian, he never would have been Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations over sucha man as Edward Everett. Judge Bouldin is a stout, bald-headed nullifier, who can storm, like an army, and " swear terribly in Flanders."-John Randolph is to take his place, for there is no doubt that he will be elected if he concludes to be a candidate, though he cannot sit upright at present. Mercer is distinguished for the part he has taken in colonization, internal improvements and in all the great works of the day.

Stevenson, as a Speaker, is well known to the public. He is a good speaker, ready, decisive, and energetic, but a great collar man, and one in whom his adversaries have little or no confidence, for he is at times tricky, and not always honorable. He is fluent, and speaks to effect .-He has good abilities, and is among the first of the Virginians. No man can better appease a tumult in the House of Representatives. No man can better keep disorderly men in order. He is most politely saucy, and most agreeably decisive. He insists with all proper grace on an absolute bedience, and generally calms the House in its Jour. of Com.] Frour has declined; 300 barrels greatest tempests. He can keep his temper when all others are in a rage, and look grave when all are shaking their sides with laughter. Putton is a young man of considerable talent, and is well thought of. He is a Virginia metaphysician, and is gifted in all its puzzles. He speaks often, and and Matanzas at 29 cents. Rice continues acmakes the best of his cause, good or bad. In tive; sales of the week 1,300 tierces, at steady debate he is courteous and candid, and rather in- prices. Craig talks much, and is a good third rate man. There are others of more ability, but they seldom put their heads above water.

PERIODICALS—At & per annum.

JUST received by WM. M MORYISON, who is appointed Agent for this place, the three first numbers of the re-publication of Blackwood's Magazine, The Metropolitan, and the Foreign Quarterly Review—all for the small sum of seven dollars.

The above works, which are now re-published, are of established character for the ability and interest with which they are conducted. Blackwood is well known. which they are conducted. Blackwood is well known as the ablest and most interesting of the foreign periodicals. The Metropolitan is a new periodical, edited by Thomas Campbell, (recently Editor of the New Monthly) and Thomas Moore, assisted by Harrison, (author of Diary of a Physician) Mrs Hemans, Mrs. Norton, and other writers of high reputation. The Foreign Quarterly Review is devoted principally to Continental Literature, and is conducted with great ta-lent. It treats of the literature and institutions of this country with impartiality, and often in terms of high and deserved commendation. It enjoys at present a her reputation than either of the tish Reviews. The expensiveness of the original publications prevents any extensive circulation of them in this country—the separate cost of the cheapest being cation, and the cost of the three not less than 35 dollars, five times the cost of the re-print. No intermixture of the works will be permitted to occur, but all the articles of each number will be printed consecutively, as in the original, and in such ner that at the close of the year each work can be se-parated by the Binder, and bound by itself. The work is handsomely printed with new type, on fine paper, in imperial 16mo (octavo), in weekly numbers of 22

fifty per cent. above that of the whole of the re-publi-

Encyclopedia Americana. THIRTEENTH Volume, or Supplement, of this valuable work, is just received by the subscriber, containing references to articles in the foregoing volumes, with an Appendix, and a list of the contribut.
